Life Insurance.

We call the special attention of our readers to the FOURTH ASSUAL REPORT OF THE MUTUAL LIFE ISSU-HANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK, published in to-day's paper. In addition to the highly respectable Directory who manage this institution, it has a constantly increas-ing fund to meet its liabilities on policies, amounting on the 1st instant to $322,557 87, the whole of which has been accumulated during four years from premiums and interest on investments. On the 1st February, 1848, being a period of five years from the time it commenced business, the nett funds of the Company will probably exceed $500,000; on which a dividend will then be declared in favor of each member, in proportion to the amount of premiums paid by him or her previously thereto. This dividend is to be placed at the credit of the assured party, and will be payable with the sum insured in the event of death occurring. In this way the institution operates precisely as a Savings Bank on at least seven-tenths of the amount of premiums paid, which inure to those in whose behalf the insurance is effected; and the cost of insurance is reduced to its lowest possible amount. The great utility of Life Insurance to all classes one to heed in season the necessities of his family. It would be well if lessons of prudence were taught by the occurrence of such cases—but in general, the living appear to act as if they were not subject to the all-pervading law of mortality. Life Insurance renders the accomplishment of this object—timely provision for those dependant on our efforts—positively certain; while the pecuniary means used for the purpose would not, amid the usual vicisitudes of human life, produce the same results whole continuance of his life, at an annual premium of $237 50. At that age his expectation of life, according to the best tables of mortality, is a fraction over 20 years. Now, as human affairs are generally managed, is it proba-ble that any one could begin at 51 pears of age—the down-hill side of life—with a capital of $237 50, and, by honest means, accumulate in the succeeding twenty years a net fortune of $5,000? We take it that such a favorable result is a contingency rarely occurring among men; and hence must insist that Life Insurance is a far superior mode of accomplishing an exceedingly desirable object to the head of the family, and one, too, not easily rendered way to prevent baldness, is to go bare-headed, or term of life will secure the sum insured, let death happen way to prevent baldness, is to go bare-headed, or wear a well ventilated hat:
